Do You Have a Cloud?

I was speaking to an aspiring writer the other day, and she told me that she had written a partial book, but her computer crashed and it was lost. Now, she needs to go back and write it again from memory. Can you imagine that? But it is all too common an experience. For me, my editor and wife Debbie puts everything in Dropbox, and I put everything in Microsoft's One Drive. We are double covered. These are two of the biggest clouds. It is imperative that you not depend on your own machines and technology to protect and save your work. I supposed there was an earlier time when Debbie and I might have been caught without this protection from technology.

If you do not have the funds to get a cloud, then at least get a free Gmail account from Google and store the precious material in Google Drive, or, even simpler, save your Word docs to an email in drafts. There it stays until you need it, and Google has to close and go out of business for you to lose that precious work. This is the poor man's way to save things.

The Chosen

If you have not watched the Chosen yet, a TV series about the disciples of Christ and their lives once they met HIM. Just for your own benefit as a creative person you should watch season 1 all 8 episodes. It is incredible. The creator Dallas Jenkins is a young movie maker and comes on and speaks before and after, and he is funding this through donations. He created this season 1 with a type of crowdfunding/movie investing by giving people. He expects to make 8 seasons. See Episode 1 on Youtube here: <https://youtu.be/craeyJdrCsE>
